Gymnastics State Championship

BY KATE DODGE

On February 17, the CVU gymnastics team wrapped up the season by competing at the Vermont State Gymnastics Championship, held at St. Johnsbury Academy. CVU (7-1) took second place out of ten teams, facing stiff competition from Essex. Hinesburg residents Ruby Opton and Jasmine Dye both earned spots on the podium. Opton, a senior, came in second on balance beam, third on floor, and sixth in the All-Around. Dye, a sophomore, took fifth on balance beam and sixth place on uneven bars. Congratulations to the team on a great season.

The CVU Gymnastics Team came in second place at the Vermont State Gymnastics Championship.

Partnerships to Create and Maintain Affordable Housing

BY XANDER PATTERSON AND CARL BOHLEN, HINESBURG AFFORDABLE HOUSING COMMITTEE MEMBERS

Welcome to the third installment of the Hinesburg Affordable Housing Committee's (HAHC) exploration into causes of and solutions for our town's crisis in housing, especially affordable housing. It is a crisis inflicting not just our town, but also our county, our state, much of the country, and very possibly you or someone you know. What can we do about it here in Hinesburg?

The State of Housing in Hinesburg

Housing is scarce. In Chittenden

County the rental vacancy rate is just 1 percent. (A 4-6 percent vacancy rate balances the needs of both renters and property owners.) Homes for sale are similarly hard to find. Hence, rents and sales prices are high. Housing is considered

April 8, the Heifer’s Dilemma...

When the sun goes dark in an eclipse, birds and tree frogs and even the crickets quickly go silent. It’s an eerie feeling. But consider the plight of the dairy cows. Do they head for the milking parlor? It’s a long walk...they have no real sense of time. But then, before they reach the paddock gate, it turns light again. Say what?

The birds and frogs and crickets resume their noisy chatter pretty quickly. Even the neighborhood Bard Owl is likely to chime in with a ‘who-who, who cooks for you?’ as daylight resumes.

But the cows? Turn around and go back to grazing? Lay down and think about it? Mill about in confusion, or moo up a protest? Doubt they’ll be off their feed, but will milk production be down? Inquiring minds want to know!

TOWN NEWS

Town Manager Report

BY TODD ODIT

A successful Town Meeting is behind us, and with the voters approving all of the town budgets, we can focus on moving existing capital projects along as well as contemplating how we might be able to address some of the issues that were raised at the informational meeting.

One of the projects that staff and the selectboard will need to work on is the Town Hall. While the roof has been stabilized, it is not a long-term fix. More work will need to be done. But the Town Hall needs more than just a roof, it needs: to be compliant with Americans with Disabilities Act; to be energy efficient (net zero?); and to provide more office and community space. Initial conceptual design work was completed last spring. An energy assessment of Town Hall was conducted mid-March. Revisiting the conceptual designs knowing the building’s energy deficiencies will be the first step.

Affordable housing has been a priority of the selectboard and we recently had a bit of serendipity on that front. Over the past few years while out on my lunchtime run, I noticed an underutilized property in the village and wondered if and how it could become a site for an affordable housing project. After contacting the landowner and asking their plans for the property, Carl Bohlen, the Chair of the Affordable Housing Committee, helped me connect the landowner with Green Mountain Habitat. A few weeks later we learned that Green Mountain Habitat would be acquiring the property, with hopes to construct six perpetually affordable ownership units.

Regarding the informational town meeting, the overarching theme seemed to be a desire for more services, such as sidewalks, traffic calming, road maintenance and public safety services. Given the squeeze the town is currently under (increasing costs and a fairly static taxable base that is mainly residential) expanding services or providing more services will be a significant challenge. And that doesn’t appear likely to change anytime soon.

In closing, thank you to everyone who voted, regardless of how you voted. Participating in your local government is welcomed and appreciated. And there are many ways to do so throughout the year. Check the town’s website for more information www.hinesburg.org. You can also email me at todit@hinesburg.org or call me at 802-482-4206. Better yet, stop by Town Hall and let’s chat.

Planning News

BY ALEX WEINHAGEN, DIRECTOR OF PLANNING & ZONING

Community Survey Results

Thank you! We received over 500 responses to the community vision survey that was open from January 10 through February 23. Survey results can be found on the town website, hinesburg.org/planning-commission/pages/town-plan-update. See below for results to two simple questions – one heartening, one concerning. Stay tuned, as we are planning for community forums and potentially additional issue-specific surveys.

All of this is our attempt to get community input as the Planning Commission works on updating the Hinesburg Town Plan. The Town Plan describes the town’s history, the existing physical, social, and economic conditions of the community, and establishes a vision for Hinesburg’s future. This vision is supported by specific goals and action items.

Rural Residential 1 District – Rezoning Proposal

The selectboard got a brief introduction to the Planning Commission’s RR1 rezoning proposal on February 21. They plan to discuss it in more depth at their April 3 meeting. After their discussion on April 3, the selectboard has a few options:

- Schedule and hold a public hearing.
- Make minor changes, and then schedule and hold a public hearing.
- Send the proposal back to the Planning Commission to be reworked.

Beyond the April 3 meeting, the selectboard must hold at least one public hearing before any revisions can be adopted. After they hold a public hearing, the selectboard decides whether to adopt the revisions or send them back to the Planning Commission. The proposal and additional information can be found on the Town website, hinesburg.org/planning-zoning/pages/regulation-revisions

This proposal is the result of nearly three years of discussion, site visits, and community outreach by the Planning Commission. It stems from an action item in the Town Plan to revise the zoning for the rural portions of the RR1 district in order to reinforce the rural character of these areas. The commission heard from many people – some seeking stronger protections for wildlife habitat and other natural resources, and some seeking to preserve landowner development rights under the existing zoning. The commission sought to balance these perspectives, while revising the current one-size fits all zoning for the RR1 district. The proposal seeks to treat the most rural portions of the RR1 district the same as the other rural areas in Hinesburg – where development remains possible at reasonable levels, but where natural resources and the working landscape remain priorities.

The RR1 district is that center slice of Hinesburg, bounded by Route 116 on the west and Richmond Road and North Road on the east, excluding the village growth area. The district includes very densely settled areas along Richmond Road that are served by municipal water and/or sewer (e.g., Birchwood Drive neighborhood, Sunset Villa mobile home park). It also includes lightly settled areas constrained by steep slopes and sensitive natural resources – e.g., Mt. Pritchard area (near St. George border) and Lavigne Hill Road area. The proposed changes divide and rezone the existing RR1 zoning district into new and surrounding zoning districts to better reflect different land forms, patterns of development, and land use priorities.

Zoning Modernization – April 10 Hearing

Over the last few years, there have been significant changes to the state law that governs municipal zoning and land use regulations. These have largely been in response to Vermont’s housing supply and affordability problems. Most of these changes were geared to make it easier to create new housing.

With funding from a State Municipal Bylaw Modernization Grant, the Planning Commission engaged a planning consultant (PlaceSense LLC) to analyze Hinesburg’s existing land use regulations and help us make minor revisions to bring us into compliance with state statute, and enable the creation of more housing, especially more affordable housing. The area affected is principally the eight Village Growth Area zoning districts, but some changes will have a townwide effect.

Some examples:

- Treat duplexes the same as single-unit dwellings in terms of required lot area, setbacks, etc.
- Remove barriers to the creation of 3-plex and 4-plex buildings.
- Allow for 900-plus square foot accessory apartments, and remove bedroom limits and access drive restrictions.
- Increase the amount of affordable housing required of larger developments in the village growth area.
- Eliminate our current density bonus system in favor of a more simple and consistent system.

The Planning Commission will hold a public hearing at 7 p.m. on April 10. We want your questions and comments. Not an evening meeting person? No problem! Contact Alex Weinhausen, Director of Planning & Zoning (aweinhausen@hinesburg.org)

Planning Commission & DRB Vacancies

We have several vacancies on both the Planning Commission and the Development Review Board. Do you have the time, interest, and inclination to step up and help out? Want to help sculpt Hinesburg's future vision and the land use regulations that help us achieve it? Wondering how that new subdivision got approved? Is that business going to put in a sidewalk when it expands? Why did that development proposal get denied? Do more than just satisfy your curiosity – learn about and participate in the decision-making process itself by joining the PC or the DRB. Curious to learn more? Contact the Planning and Zoning Office for details. Hinesburg Awarded $30,275 Grant for Town Common Tree Planting

The Town of Hinesburg was recently awarded a $30,275 grant from the Vermont Urban & Community Forestry Program. The grant funds will be used to plant trees on the Hinesburg Town Common – one of many improvements planned over the next five to six years to create a vibrant community gathering space in Hinesburg's state-designated village center area. Tree planting is scheduled to commence in the fall of 2024. The grant will facilitate the following specific project elements:

- Community engagement on Green Up Day.
- Purchase of up to 50 nursery-stock trees.
- Training community volunteers who will plant and maintain the trees.
- Development of a tree maintenance plan for the newly planted trees and those in the adjacent neighborhood.
- Professional pruning of adjacent neighborhood trees with a demonstration of proper tree care for community members.
- Protection of an existing, large ash tree with fencing to minimize soil compaction during Town Common regrading site work.

- Purchase and application of topsoil in tree planting areas.
- Purchase and installation of staking materials, mulch, and irrigation for newly planted trees.

The funding for this project comes from the U.S. Forest Service and, specifically, the Inflation Reduction Act of 2022. The intent of this funding is to increase and maintain a healthy urban tree canopy and access to nature in underserved, under-resourced communities.

Community members interested in volunteering (with training and oversight by the Town Tree Warden) are encouraged to contact Alex Weinhagen, Director of Planning & Zoning, aweinhagen@hinesburg.org, 802-482-4209. More information about the Hinesburg Town Common Project is available online: hinesburg.org/planning-zoning/pages/town-common-design.

Selectboard Highlights

BY MERRILY LOVELL,
SELECTBOARD CHAIRPERSON

February 21

The selectboard had a packed meeting with several important presentations.

The Fire Impact Fee presentation by Jon Slason, PE, from VSD Consulting LLC, described, with many details, the three choices the selectboard have for the new fire impact fee. The selectboard will examine the report and have a fuller discussion at a future meeting.

Fire Department Software purchase: Nick Baker, Fire Chief, explained that, due to changes in companies it has used in the past, the fire department needs to change to a company called First Due, operated by Locality Media. The high cost of this new company will be partly offset by other services the fire department will no longer need due to the inclusive services First Due offers.

CVSD School Budget presentation: Keith Roberts, one of Hinesburg's representatives on the Champlain Valley School District Board, gave the selectboard a brief overview and explanation of the complicated processes involved in the school budget.

RR1 zoning district regulation amendments: Alex Weinhagen gave us a preliminary overview of the changes the Planning Commission is suggesting for the RRI zoning district. Major changes are being suggested. There was public comment after this brief presentation and this topic will come back to the selectboard at a later date for a fuller discussion and more time for public input. Then we will have a public hearing where there will again be time for public comments.

Land for Affordable Housing Project: The possibility of using ARPA funds to support a Habitat for Humanity project to build six owner-occupied homes was discussed. All selectboard members were in favor of supporting affordable housing in Hinesburg, but there was some disagreement on how to fund the project. Therefore, this item will come back at a future meeting.

The selectboard approved the Town Common Committee application for an AARP Community Challenge program grant of $30,000 for benches and picnic tables as another step in building our Town Common.

FY 23 Audit Report: The detailed yearly audit report was given to the selectboard. As in previous years, the auditors found no issues with the financial statements of the Town government.

March 6

The selectboard met for a reorganization meeting and to establish some procedures and posts for the coming year. With the same members taking up selectboard work for the new year, the following officers were re-elected: Merrily Lovell, Chair; Maggie Gordon, Vice-chair.

Other routine, annual measures were approved, such as appointing The Citizen as our newspaper of record, re-adopting our Code of Ethics and our Operating Guidelines, and adopting the Road and Bridge Standards.

In discussing the Town Meeting, selectboard members felt it went smoothly and there were good discussions and helpful suggestions. The zoom disruption has been resolved and hopefully will not happen again during future meetings. The selectboard apologizes to anyone who was offended by anything heard during this disruption. In the future, access to zoom meetings will be more restricted, making our meetings safer.

Blinded By the Light?

BY JIM JARVIS, ZONING ADMINISTRATOR

It's a Springsteen song from the '70s, but recent contractor calls to the zoning office show that it's still a topic for discussion today. We get periodic email and phone calls concerning neighbors' lights, and asking for guidance. For those of you curious about the song, you'll find a few tidbits at the end of this article.

First, why is zoning involved with this? For decades, our regulations required that new development ensure that outdoor lights were installed or shielded to reduce glare and night sky illumination. On July 12, 2018, the regulations were updated with greater specificity and certain exemptions. Section 5.29 of the zoning regulations speak to this. Hinesburg zoning regulations specifically try to minimize lighting impact on nearby properties and roads, reduce energy use, and protect the visibility of the night sky.

Be a good neighbor: New lighting installed after 2018 is subject to the regulations, even on existing homes and businesses. We're plenty busy dealing with town development and would rather not become the lighting police; so please think about your neighbors when installing new outdoor lights or changing out existing lights with new fixtures.

If you increase the number of exterior lights, or increase their brightness, you DO have to meet current standards. Similarly, if you change the aiming of the lights so they impact neighbors, or blind drivers on your road, you may be subject to the lighting regulations.

The general residential use exemption permits up to four lights per building, each with light output no greater than 1200 lumens. Such lights need not be shielded, nor meet any of the other provisions in section 5.29, so long as they're not more than 1200 lumens, as marked on the product. Low level decorative lighting, like holiday lights, is exempt, as is lighting of the U.S. flag. The regulations suggest this be done from the top of the flagpole, looking down, rather than up, contributing to sky glow.

LED lamps can appear brighter than an equivalent incandescent bulb. LEDs tend to be bluer than incandescents, which makes them seem brighter and increases scattered light. For reference, a 100W lightbulb yields 1600 lumens. 75W is equivalent to 1100 lumens.

Color temperature matters for non-exempt lighting. The regulations discuss color temperature and Color Rendering Index (CRI), requiring a CRI of 60 or above. This means white LEDs or metal halide lamps are preferred over Mercury Vapor (blue-green) or Sodium Vapor (yellow). If you're buying LEDs, 5500 Kelvin is equivalent to bright sunlight, while 2700 is a warm room light.

For non-exempt lighting, the rules require full-cutoff light fixtures. That is, shielded such that no light is emitted upward or horizontally, and only the desired area to be illuminated gets the light. The intent is to protect neighboring properties or roadways from intrusive lighting.

Lights on poles can't be more than 20' in the air, while lights on buildings may be no more than 15' up. Lighting of public buildings and architectural features like church steeples and bell towers doesn't require a permit, but is required to position and shield the lighting so that direct light is confined to the building to be illuminated. Similarly, temporary lighting for special events and emergencies are exempt from the regulations.

For non-exempt lighting, levels should be the minimum necessary to accomplish nighttime use of a property. Fixtures, light intensity, and placement have to ensure that only areas needing light are illuminated. Lights must be downcast, and shielded to protect the night sky from sky glow.

Did you know we have an observatory? Yes, we do. The Vermont Astronomical Society has a really neat installation on Observatory Road. Not only that, but our town library has a telescope that can be checked out by star-inspired youngsters and oldsters alike.

So, there are two good reasons to keep the sky glow to a minimum, not to mention not blinding your neighbors or drivers on nearby roads with unshielded or mis-aimed lighting.

Now for the fun part: If you've heard Manfred Mann's slurred hit rendition of Springsteen's song ... the words are "...blinded by the light...revved up like a Deuce... another runner in the night."

A classic 'Deuce' was a '32 Ford, equipped with a double barrel carburetor (deuce). Picture a cherry red convertible coupe, with chromed headers, valve cover and air intake, hood removed for easy viewing. They used to race 'em along the main drag in Asbury Park, N.J., back in the day, when Springsteen and the E Street Band were performing at The Stone Pony.

The zoning regulations are detailed, so if you have questions, we'd be glad to help you find the answers. There's a really handy graphic showing acceptable lighting fixtures in the lighting regulations. It's found on page 106 of the lighting regulations. You can get to it from the town website, or contact me at town offices: 802-482-4213, jjarvis@hinesburg.org.

Reminders from our Drop-Off Centers

Spring and warmer weather are right around the corner, so here are some reminders from CSWD as you head into the season of gardening and yard cleanup.

Reminder #1: We take yard waste year-round at these facilities only:

Organics Recycling Facility in Williston (Home of Green Mountain Compost)

Drop-Off Center in Essex

Drop-Off Center in South Burlington

Drop-Off Center in Milton

Drop-Off Center in Hinesburg (leaves and yard trimmings only)

Reminder #2: Pellet and soil bags are trash. Even though many of them say they are recyclable, CSWD does not accept these as blue-bin recycling.

Reminder #3: Black plastic is not recyclable in the blue bin. If you are looking to dispose of your black plastic pots, please dispose of these in the trash and not your recycling bin. Other great options include reusing or giving to a garden center or plant store.

Solar Eclipse Glasses

On April 8, Vermont will be a prime location for viewing this year's solar eclipse. Our state is expecting a lot of solar eclipse viewers, which also means a lot of solar eclipse glasses to divert from the landfill.

CSWD has partnered with Astronomers Without Borders to establish collection sites for solar eclipse glasses to be reused. These glasses will then be redistributed to communities who might not otherwise have a safe way to view the solar eclipse.

We are working with six different towns and businesses in Chittenden County to establish roughly 25 collection bins for these glasses. We will also have bins at each of our Drop-Off Centers for you to bring your solar glasses.

The number of Vermonters without bank accounts has climbed in recent years, from 0.7 percent of households in 2019 to 2.5 percent in 2021, according to the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp. A Senate bill would look to protect the consumer power of those households by requiring businesses to accept cash for transactions under $1,000.

S.175 was introduced by Sen. Andrew Perchlik, D/P-Washington, in a Feb. 22 Senate economic development committee meeting. Perchlik said constituents approached him about such a bill after they were turned away from a business because they only had cash, and soon he realized many groups in the state could often be in the same situation.

“There was concern about refugee populations,” he said in an interview. “At first I was like, ‘How many people don’t have credit cards?’ It seems like it’s pretty prevalent, electronic pay of some sort. And then I found out there really are people getting out of prison or people that are immigrants or people that have had problems with credit cards that purposely don’t have them so that they don’t get into debt. And so it was more common than I thought.”

Perchlik said he also heard from an employee at a ski resort that went cashless who noticed customers were surprised they needed credit cards to purchase not only lift tickets and equipment but also food and beverages.

“The person in the ski area thought it was something that businesses did on purpose, and it was becoming more common as a way to get people to spend more money because, according to this person, people are more likely to spend money when they don’t have to see the cash or hand it over.” Perchlik said in the interview. “Or if a parent is giving money to a kid for lunch, they can say, ‘Here’s $20 — you have to spend within $20.’ Now it’s, ‘Here’s a credit card.’”

Similar legislation requiring businesses to accept cash has been enacted in Connecticut, Colorado,

New Jersey and Massachusetts, as well as by local governments in New York City and Philadelphia.

In a Feb. 28 committee meeting, one senator expressed concerns over the safety of businesses carrying large amounts of cash, especially those open late at night.

“If you have an employee in an isolated location, or alone at night in a convenience store and it’s held up, it’s difficult to get employees after that,” said Sen. Ann Cummings, D-Washington, adding later, “It’s nice until we can’t get anybody to man the transfer station or the convenience store at night.”

At the same meeting, Sen. Randy Brock, R-Franklin, questioned the need for the bill at all.

“The merchant can decide,” Brock said. “And if you don’t like the merchant’s policy, you’ll go elsewhere. But you can always change the merchant. If the merchant is losing business, they’re not going to do business that way.”

Jay Greene, a policy analyst from the Vermont Office of Racial Equity, testified in support of the bill and its potential for protecting the consumer power of marginalized people in Vermont.

“Protecting the right to pay cash is one of the office’s top policy priorities for this legislative session,” Greene said in the Feb. 28 meeting. “There are a significant number of Vermonters who are unbanked,” Greene added later. “There are likely racial disparities in who is unbanked in Vermont. It’s more likely to be a person of the household of color who is unbanked, a Black or Hispanic household. So our office is strongly in favor of making this legislation the most protective of unbanked and underbanked households that it can possibly be.”

In a letter to the committee, the Office of Racial Equity cited the importance of cash as a failsafe.

“(Cash) can survive natural disasters, electrical grid failures, outdoor and open-air market settings and cashless transaction system failure scenarios,” the letter reads. “Vermont is likely to experience more frequent and more severe natural disasters in the near future due to climate change. It is essential that retail businesses maintain the infrastructure needed to accept cash in case cashless payment systems fail.”

If passed, S.175 will go into effect July 1.

Financial Focus: When Should You Take Social Security?

FROM PRESS RELEASE

One of your important sources of retirement income will likely be Social Security – but when should you start taking it?

You can start collecting Social Security benefits at 62, but your checks will be considerably bigger if you wait until your full retirement age, which is likely between 66 and 67. You could even wait until you're 70, at which point the payments will max out, except for yearly cost-of-living adjustments. But if you need the money, you need the money, even if you're just 62 or any age before full retirement age.

However, if you have adequate financial resources to meet your monthly needs, whether through earned income, your investment portfolio or a combination of the two, you could have some flexibility in choosing when to take Social Security. In this case, you may want to weigh these considerations:

- Life expectancy – For all of us, it's one of life's great mysteries: How long will we live? Of course, we can't see into the future, so the question can't be answered with total confidence. But to make an informed decision on when to take Social Security, you don't need to know your exact lifespan – you just need to make a reasonably good estimate. So, for example, if you're approaching 62, you're enjoying excellent health and you have a family history of longevity, you might conclude it's worth waiting a few years to collect Social Security, so you can receive the bigger payments. Conversely, if your health is questionable and your family has not been fortunate in terms of longevity, you might want to start taking your benefits earlier.
- Employment – You can certainly continue working and still receive Social Security benefits. However, if you're under your full retirement age for the entire year, Social Security will deduct $1 from your benefits for every $2 you earn above the annual limit of $22,320. In the year you reach your full retirement age, Social Security will deduct $1 in benefits for every $3 you earn above $59,520. So, you may want to keep these reductions in mind when deciding when to begin accepting benefits. Once you reach your full retirement age, you can earn any amount without losing benefits. (Also, at your full retirement age, Social Security will recalculate your benefit amount to credit you for the months you received reduced benefits because of your excess earnings.)

- Spouse – Spouses can receive two types of Social Security benefits: spousal and survivor. With a spousal benefit, your spouse can receive up to 50 percent of your full retirement benefits, regardless of when you start taking them. (Your spouse's benefit can be reduced by the amount of their own retirement benefit and whether they took Social Security before their full retirement age.) But with a survivor benefit, your decision about when to take Social Security can make a big difference. A surviving spouse can receive the larger of their own benefit or 100 percent of a deceased spouse's benefit, so if you take benefits early and receive a permanent reduction, your spouse's survivor benefit may also be reduced for their lifetime.

When to take Social Security is an important – and irrevocable – decision. So, consider all the factors before making your choice.

COMMENTARY

Boiler Room Operations

BY ROGER DONEGAN

In a world where genuine understanding is sometimes blunted by a hackneyed phrase or cliché, the old saying that a suspicious activity or a dubious phone solicitation was a “boiler room operation” used to make me laugh as I spent the better part of my work life in boiler rooms, fire rooms, and powerhouses. I’m much more at home in a boiler room than I am in a milk room or milking parlor.

On occasion an image crossed my path which held some essence of steam generation which I’d squirrel away to preserve whatever meaning it held. Early on I retained a black and white reproduction of a woodcut engraving published by Harper’s Weekly in 1876. It has that Currier and Ives-like quality but lacks that classic lightheartedness. I believe the art world today would categorize it as “social realism.”

The image depicts a homeless mother with young children under a blanket huddled over a sidewalk grate as steam wafts up from underground. The background shows “Steam Printing” on an urban storefront giving a clue to the source of waste heat. In reality the chilly winter image conveys a false remedy as wet steam would thoroughly soak blanket and clothes and cancel out the chance to stay warm. While the scene may not stand up to objective analysis the contradictory implications are not comforting either. There are seasons and circumstances we all need heat.

You know you’re in an urban neighborhood heated by an older-designed district heating system when those curious plumes of steam escape through holes in manholes along the streets in cold weather. Chances are the steam pinpoints the location of an Armstrong steam trap or a purposeful bleed on an underground steam line between buildings. Older designed district heating systems are no strangers to Vermont. Modern systems use pressurized hot water and an insulated two pipe system with a return instead of piped steam. Most amenable to joint undertakings by government or institutional facilities, another district heating system could be on the way in Burlington. That has readily been blasted by activists for its use of home-grown biomass fuel.

In the meantime, a Sunday drive down Route 89 to Montpelier passes by former and newer designed district heating systems. New stacks and even old chimneys lead you to them. Less we forget, CVU’s set of two stacks disappearing in the rearview mirror represented a significant investment in wood-chip boiler heat in 2005.

Passing Waterbury, the curious sight of a smoke-free 1890s-style chimney pokes up from the valley, brandishing dark “VSH” letters in the brick work of a mostly buff colored stack and stands for the former “Vermont State Hospital.” As if there’s an attempt to disavow its existence an on-line search turned up nothing. Doubling back through town I found this huge chimney physically disconnected from all fixed surroundings except flat lawn. It is the closest structure to the river that had infamously flooded town and complex, most recently in the aftermath of Tropical Storm Irene in 2011. A drive onto the site yielded a clue about the chimney while the book Empty Beds / A History of Vermont State Hospital (Kincheloe and Hunt, 1988) only mentions it in an appendix.

The chimney belonged to VSH’s coal burning electrical generator plant which operated off grid until 1953, no mention of district heating. The chimney’s cast iron base inspection door embossed with “Alphons Custodis Chimney Construction Co.” tells us the chimney was once state of the art because of its composition of large radial shaped brick with high refractory and crush-proof properties. Eighteen feet over the cleanout gapes the breach where ductwork connected. Using a lift or ladder to the breach someone could demonstrate the natural draft created by the chimney’s internal funnel shape and soaring 150-foot height by releasing a feather which would be drawn up and away inside.

Cast Iron Boiler Front Embedded in Montpelier Central Plant Wall

Complex, you can see both the old VSH chimney and the pseudo-looking stack of the new central heating plant. The website of Freeman French Freeman advertises as having been the Architect of Record for the dramatic makeover of the flood-ravaged complex which includes a biomass-fueled central heating plant providing heat and hot water while preserving much of the former VSH complex rich architectural character.

Resuming the drive south, before committing to the Capitol exit, but stealing a quick glance uphill on the left, you see the National Life Insurance Company building. What looks like the eraser end of a shiny new pencil stuck into the flat top of the main building, possibly trailing a signature white plume, is the 50-foot-tall stack for two wood-burning boilers installed in 2011. The campus has three prinicipal office buildings. The Davis Building, the daytime habitat of Montpelier’s Agency of Natural Resources office workers, receives heat and hot water from the on-site distribution system.

On Route 2 (Memorial Drive), the new National Life Insurance Co. building seems to disappear. The Capitol Golden Dome glows in sunlight upstaging the 120-foot-tall historic red radial brick chimney of the Montpelier district heating plant that heats the Capitol complex and 21 other buildings downtown. The first plant burned coal supplying the central heating system low-pressure steam for 50 years. Over time the plant’s three boilers have combusted No. 6 and No. 2 fuel oil and wood chips. Two boilers and the circulating hot water distribution system were replaced by the Montpelier Community Renewable Energy Project in 2014, retaining a dual fuel capability of biomass and No. 2 fuel oil.

The everyday hazards inside a district heating facility reasonably make it “employees only.” The design firm gbArchitecture gave the Montpelier District Heat Plant the moniker “Pompidou Centre” of Montpelier after the famous “inside-out” museum built in Paris, France, in the ‘70s. The plant’s inside floor plan, busy with colorfully painted structural steel, pipes, and equipment, can be seen from Route 2 through the exterior glass wall when interior light overtakes daylight. On the State Street side, up an alley in a patchwork of parking lots, a person gets to see the décor’s nod to the past – an ornate perfect condition stove black cast iron boiler front five feet in diameter set into a brick wall by an entrance. The style of embossing the 1900s manufacturer’s name and fancy initials on this boiler front is reminiscent of fire doors on wood stoves at home or even the fire doors on an old Leader Evaporator for boiling sap.

The ornate boiler front looks to be the model in a hand-painted floor tile of a 1995 ground floor “Arts in State Buildings Program” exhibit across the street. Titled “The Old Powerhouse,” this exhibit commemorates the building’s previous function as the 1921 power plant for the adjacent and former fifth National Life Insurance Company headquarters. Other tiles portray workers in the steam, laundry and trade shops that were housed there from the 1920s through the 1950s.

Let’s Stay Out of Prison

BY BILL SCHUBART

I think a lot about the criminal justice system. At 79, I’ve mostly evaded its embrace except for a few driving offenses, a surprise visit from the FBI and a college incident in Ohio that I was too drunk to remember, but one that landed me in a drunk tank for an evening.

I have friends who’ve been on both sides of the system, both transgressors and enforcers: police, lawyers, judges, jailors, and, like many, I understand the system is antiquated, unjust, and needs to be reimagined.

The good news is there are many working today to build a better, more just system, one that maintains the goal of safeguarding the public from chronic violence and theft but abandons the punitive Old Testament ethos.

There are domestic and international models from which we can learn, like the much-touted Norway model, Portugal’s decision to decriminalize drug addiction and replace jail with addiction treatment, and pioneering work being done nearby in the State of Maine, as well as work being done in our own state that has reduced our incarcerated population by almost half.

The broader question we must ask ourselves is, “Are we a punitive society or a supportive community that invests in our citizens and shares prosperity? Do we invest in people and communities... or jails, homeless shelters, and emergency rooms?”

The United States has one of the highest per capita incarceration rates in the developed world. In the U.S., only Maine, Rhode Island and Massachusetts have a lower per capita incarceration rate than Vermont. As of March 11, Vermont's total incarcerated population was 1,363, of which 112 are female and 124 men are housed out-of-state at CoreCivic in Mississippi, a for-profit prison company. Vermont's total population under some form of community supervision is 3,141 on probation, 660 on parole, and 246 on furlough.

A rapidly growing rate of geriatric prisoners, reflecting long sentencing, has put a severe burden on all prison systems, especially as it relates to the correctional system's obligation to provide healthcare. Given very low recidivism rates for male prisoners over the age of 40 (7.5 percent), why not enable prisoners to earn early release and better prepare them for reentry?

Senator Tanya Vyhovsky has sponsored bill S.155 that would allow an incarcerated person to petition a court for early release after serving a fixed portion of their sentence based on earned criteria such as good behavior or completing educational or training programs. However, it is not expected to pass this session.

Senate bill S.58, an omnibus crime bill reflecting earlier "tough-on-crime" attitudes, makes prosecuting drug crimes easier, adds new crimes, and delays implementation of the "raise-the-age" initiative to reduce the number of juveniles in corrections.

To this point, in a later column, I'll write about an innovative program under way between Community College of Vermont (CCV) and the Vermont Department of Corrections (DOC).

A former Commissioner of Corrections once reminded me that Corrections doesn't put people in jail; police, prosecutors, legislators, juries (us), and judges do. Corrections is their keeper, charged with maintaining a secure facility and ensuring the health and well-being of those in their care.

Many correctional systems, including Vermont's, understand that they must also prepare those in their care for a life outside. This may include access to language, literacy and other basic education skills, job training, addiction treatment, healthcare, and/or trauma-informed counseling. So given the certainty of reentry into our communities, how do we best use an incarcerated person's time inside?

First, we must understand the criminogenic environment outside and how it can lead to criminal behavior. Studies have shown that between 62-78 percent of incarcerated adult males experienced trauma during their lifetime prior to incarceration.

We also know that the prefrontal cortex matures more slowly in boys than in girls. Put simply, young boys and men do more risky and stupid things when they're young. Do you want to be measured solely by the worst mistake you made in your lifetime? I don't. Did nothing else matter? Are we only the sum of our worst behaviors?

After an offender's proven guilty in a court of law but prior to the sentencing hearing, what if the judiciary required a professional evaluation to determine whether a defendant's alleged crime resulted from poverty, physical or mental illness, substance abuse, disability, gambling, or the intergenerational transfer of trauma?

If any of these latter causes were determined to be the genesis of the alleged crime, treatment would replace judicial process and sentencing.

Such a system would significantly reduce the court backlog that denies so many alleged perpetrators the constitutionally guaranteed right to a "speedy trial."

The consequences of such a process change would put immense pressure on us as a society to invest in our community and family-support systems: addiction treatment, mental-health counseling, healthcare access, education and job training, and anti-poverty efforts (housing, hunger etc.) initiatives which would, however, reduce entries into our correctional system and their consequent costs. Currently, preventative supportive services are woefully inadequate and underfunded.

Meanwhile, Governor Scott's administration has introduced plans to build a new prison estimated to cost $70 million, although his office estimates it may well cost twice that. What community support services could be funded for that amount?

Vermont's hunger, homelessness, and poverty rates are rising. So too has the reported incidence of young people suffering from mental health issues. Between 2018 and 2021 Vermont experienced a 60 percent increase in children ages 3-8 years old with a mental, emotional or a behavioral health condition presenting as anxiety, depression or behavioral and conduct problems.

We know through many studies that moving our social and economic investments upstream to education, intervention, prevention, and access to support services will radically reduce our costs of remediation, repair, and restoration. We can measure our societal failures by the number of people waiting in emergency rooms, committing self-harm or suicide, shooting up on our streets, or wasting away behind bars.

Most Vermonters want a more effective criminal justice system, one that reduces reliance on prisons but focuses instead on causation, prevention, and community support systems. And thanks to the Vermont Prisoner's Rights Office within the Office of the Defender General, Jayna Ahsaf of the Vermont - FreeHer Campaign, the Vermont ACLU's Smart Justice Campaign, and visionary leadership in the DOC, we are seeing significant progress. But the shift to a more just and cost-efficient system is up to us.

▶ Affordable Housing

"affordable" if it costs 30 percent or less of a household's income, including rent or mortgage, utilities, insurance and taxes. Chittenden County's median rent of $1,386 is "affordable" only to households earning more than $40,000 annually. That's only half of renters in Hinesburg. The Chittenden County's median home sale price of $435,000 is "affordable" only to households earning $140,000 or more.

Ultimately, housing costs will only come down when the housing stock goes up. But building new homes is even more expensive. Only a few years ago, new dwellings typically cost about $350,000 to build. Now they cost close to $500,000. At these costs, the market alone cannot build new housing that's affordable without some sort of help from the public, through the government and/or nonprofits.

Partnerships Can Create and Maintain Affordable Housing

Hinesburg's Housing Needs Assessment, newly updated and released just last June, translates what state and county new housing goals mean for Hinesburg. To meet the goals of the Building Homes Together campaign, Hinesburg would have to build about 140 new homes (35 affordable) by 2025, and about 275 by 2029. Hinesburg has several projects in the works right now that, should they reach fruition, together would meet or exceed the 2029 goal. Each relies on its own unique arrangement of partnerships between the town, nonprofit housing organizations, and private developers.

Kelley's Field, a 55-plus community in the heart of the village, is adding 24 units, all perpetually affordable. It is managed by the nonprofits Cathedral Square and Evernorth and supported by the town with a $50,000 grant and with help securing $600,000 in state-federal funds.

Haystack Crossing, to be located west of 116 and south of Shelburne Falls Road, envisions in phase one 176 homes of various forms and sizes, 20 of them perpetually affordable. The town is working with the developer to build and maintain the water and sewer services the project will require.

Hinesburg Center II is adding 73 units, eight of them perpetually affordable, to its project behind Kinney's. The town is giving the effort a gentle assist by allowing it to meet its open space requirements with a donation to the development of the planned Town Commons nearby.

Windy Ridge seeks to build 77 units, 60 of them perpetually affordable, east of 116 and south of CVU Road, around the NRG complex. The current plan is for 40 owner-occupied single and multi-family homes and 37 rentals. The land is being donated by a founder of NRG and managed by Champlain Housing Trust (CHT). CHT will partner with Evernorth on rentals, and Sterling Construction and Green Mountain Habitat for Humanity on the ownership units.

Public assistance comes in various forms, including letters of support to help developers secure financing, direct grants, help with infrastructure, or special dispensation in zoning requirements to cut costs and streamline permitting. HAHC also does its best to influence and support our town's efforts to meet its housing needs, and to make sure we do so in a way that benefits the town and all of the people in it.

Stay tuned for next month's installment of HAHC's exploration into Hinesburg's housing crisis. For more details, refer to the Hinesburg Housing Needs Assessment, which is available on the HAHC page on the town website.

CVSD News

Superintendent's Message

BY RENE SANCHEZ

Dear Champlain Valley School District Community,

On Town Meeting Day, our CVSD budget was one of 30 school budgets not approved across the state of Vermont. During the lead-up to the vote, community members informed us that the tax rate caused by the implementation of Vermont's new school finance law, Act 127, was a bridge too far for many to support our proposed budget. That being said, we were made aware that their historical support for the schools, students, and staff did not and had not wavered.

Since the Wednesday after Town Meeting Day, district and school leaders have been meeting to find efficiencies or reductions. There have been regular conversations with the board leadership to prepare for the special meeting to discuss options for selecting a new budget proposal. Before and after the town meeting vote, the district received many communications through email and Let's Talk with suggestions and ideas about what might be changed or reduced in our budget. Those ideas have been heard, seen, and considered.

At the March 12 Champlain Valley School District's Board of Directors special meeting, the board discussed several options for a revised budget. These options present reductions in staffing and programming across our schools. The board held a long, emotional meeting with much discussion. Moreover, we would like to thank the many staff and community members who attended either in person or via Zoom. Given the importance of the meeting, we are grateful for the community's attention to it.

At the end of the meeting, the board approved a new budget and the new warnings to present to voters. Our main goal was to trim the budget to a level that our community could fully get behind, all while continuing to provide the best possible service to students with the reductions required to achieve the revised budget. With that in mind, the new CVSD proposed budget requests a 5.9 percent budgetary increase compared to this year, which results in a $1.32 tax rate before the Common Level of Appraisal (CLA) is factored in from each town. This pre-CLA tax rate is only two percent higher than last year. We will have estimates for the increases to taxpayers shortly, but firm numbers will not be known until after the legislature approves the yield later in their session. We will explain these numbers in more detail in upcoming communications.

The revote will take place on April 16. It will be possible to vote earlier at town offices.

We acknowledge the interest in understanding the specifics of the reductions presented in the recently proposed budget. At this time, we are unable to share detailed information. It is crucial to acknowledge that these choices have a direct impact on the lives and personal situations of individuals we deeply care about. Allowing adequate time to sensitively inform those affected and enable them to make the needed adaptations while also affording school leaders the opportunity to plan appropriately is essential to ensure that the process is informative, compassionate, and supportive.

We are developing additional materials and will hold several informational meetings to assist taxpayers in understanding the revised budget's impact. We will share these as soon as possible so that you are informed before the April 16 vote.

Solar Eclipse – No School

INFORMATION SHARED ON BEHALF OF SUPERINTENDENT SANCHEZ AND OTHER LOCAL DISTRICT SUPERINTENDENTS

As northern Vermont prepares for a rare total solar eclipse on April 8, school districts in the Champlain Valley are taking proactive measures. Initially planning for an early dismissal on that day, superintendents have continued monitoring regional developments. Considering the unique circumstances and in collaboration with local public safety officials, district officials have collectively decided to close schools for the full day.

As the day of the eclipse approaches, more businesses in the area have announced special viewing events, and state agencies are preparing for an anticipated influx of 150,000 visitors. Recognizing the potential challenges associated with the sudden surge in travelers, Vermont Emergency Management advised municipalities in their recent newsletter to prepare for possible stress on their emergency services and, in some cases, extreme traffic issues.

Given the unpredictable nature of the eclipse's impact on our region, Champlain Valley superintendents have chosen to prioritize the safety and well-being of students and staff and mutually agreed to close schools on April 8.

Earlier this year, CVSD purchased solar eclipse glasses for each student. They will be distributed the week before the eclipse.

For more information on Vermont's planning for the total solar eclipse, please visit vermont.gov/eclipse.

Updated COVID Guidance

Effective immediately, the Champlain Valley School District will adjust our isolation guidance post-COVID infection for staff and students to align with both the CDC and Vermont Department of Health recommendations.

When people get sick with any respiratory virus (including COVID, RSV or influenza), the updated guidance from the CDC recommends that they stay home and away from others. For people with COVID-19 and influenza, treatment is available and can lessen symptoms and lower the risk of severe illness (please contact your primary care for guidance on treatment options). The recommendations suggest returning to normal activities when, for at least 24 hours, symptoms are improving overall, and if a fever was present, it has been gone without use of a fever-reducing medication.

Given this information, CVSD is no longer asking students and staff who have tested positive for COVID to isolate at home through day five. Put simply, if you are sick, please stay home and return when you are feeling better.

As part of the guidance, CDC provides active recommendations on core prevention steps and strategies:

- Staying up to date with vaccination to protect people against serious illness, hospitalization, and death. This includes flu, COVID-19, and RSV if eligible.
- Practicing good hygiene by covering coughs and sneezes, washing or sanitizing hands often, and cleaning frequently touched surfaces.
- Taking steps for cleaner air, such as bringing in more fresh outside air, purifying indoor air, or gathering outdoors.

As always, if you are sick, please stay at home. When you feel better, you can return to school. Refer to the Health Services page of our website at tinyurl.com/CVSDhealth for the answers to frequently asked questions.

Poetry & Puppetry Residency at HCS

BY SARAH FRECHETTE, POETRY & PUPPETRY ARTISTIC DIRECTOR

Over the course of Monday, March 11, through Thursday, March 14, Sarah Frechette, teaching artist, world-renowned puppeteer and founder of the Vermont-based touring puppet company PuppetKabob, conducted a residency for the Hinesburg Community School's fifth grade. The program, titled "Puppetry & Poetry," gave students an engaging, accessible, confidence building, and hands-on activity to elevate this year's writing unit: Poetry – with Fine Arts. Chosen for both its creative word play and theatrical focus, Toy Theaters first appeared in the 19th century as home entertainment, outlets for imagination crafted for young people prior to the invention of television and/or video games. For this program we gave these little paper theaters a contemporary twist.

Prior to this residency the students worked with the writing teacher, Ms. Galyean, to develop poems that were used as the inspiration and text for the puppet show. The students then took their poems/scripts and, together with Puppetkabob, learned to design visually symbolic stages and performable paper puppets. In the end, each finished Toy Theater and Poem combo showcased the fifth graders' writing techniques, creative impulse and unique artistic styles.

During this residency, the fifth graders imparted their new puppet-making skills by helping the kindergarten classes create "cool kid" finger puppets. These kindergarteners were then able to bring their puppets with them to the fifth-grade showcase as they supported and celebrated their fifth-grade buddies. Between the two grades, 88 students participated and were impacted by this residency.

The fifth-grade reading teacher, Alyssa Wieland, hosted the program and brought an additional level of excitement, engagement and support to this unique creative process. This four-day residency was supported in part by PiE and the Hinesburg Community School. Ms. Wieland was instrumental in receiving this funding to secure the success of this one-of-a-kind program.

ORGANIZATIONS

Lewis Creek Association to Combat Japanese Knotweed in Watershed

BY KATE KELLY

Non-native invasive plant species have long threatened the health of ecosystems, wildlife habitat, and populations of native plants in the Lewis Creek watershed. Management can be difficult because they are easily spread via seeds, roots, fragments, animals, and humans.

Japanese knotweed is a particularly tough plant to remove. It was introduced from East Asia in the late 1800s, and was planted as an ornamental and for erosion control (but ironically, can actually increase streambank erosion). It spreads primarily by its roots/rhizomes, which can break off during a flood then resprout and form a new colony downstream. LCA hopes to engage community members and undertake a long-term project controlling knotweed (without herbicides) in our watershed, and we need your help.

A prior grant to LCA documented the presence of knotweed populations in the Lewis Creek watershed, but distribution is patchy and it has not yet spread prevalently across streambanks (unlike in many other Vermont watersheds, where it covers nearly every square foot available). LCA is excited to demonstrate a non-chemical removal method to the public at a site in North Ferrisburgh, where our technicians will be present weekly to lead removal efforts, and to display these methods to the public. Everyone is invited to help if they wish. LCA is partnering with Mike Bald (Got Weeds?) to guide this work and demonstrate effective methods for knotweed removal without herbicides – it can be done. You can also get involved in a project that uses community science to help us understand the distribution of knotweed in the watershed using iNaturalist. LCA would love to have your involvement in one or both portions of the project. If you're interested in learning more, sign up at bit.ly/lea-knotweed or reach out to Kate Kelly, Program Manager for Lewis Creek Association, at lewisecreekorg@gmail.com or 488-5203. Managing Forests for Resilience

BY ETHAN TAPPER, CHITTENDEN COUNTY FORESTER

Landowners often ask me: “is my forest healthy?” While this may seem like a simple question, the more time I spend working with forests, the more difficult it is to answer. While most people picture a healthy forest as one with lots of healthy trees, when we take a more holistic and expansive view of forest ecology, it's actually much more complicated than that. More and more, I define forest health in terms of resilience.

The resilience of a forest is essentially its ability to persevere and to bounce back from adversity – to respond to threats, stressors and disturbances while maintaining its productive capacity and natural processes over time. It's important to recognize that some amount of adversity is a normal and natural part of forest ecology – as long as there have been forests, there have been pests, parasites and pathogens, windstorms, ice storms and forest fires. While these disturbances kill trees, they are as normal (and arguably as essential) a part of forest ecology as the trees themselves.

Key to their resilience is forests' ability to regenerate – to grow new generations of trees in place of the old. In Vermont, we are blessed with forests that readily regenerate from all manner of disturbances – any time light reaches the forest floor, the forest responds with an explosion of new trees, shrubs and plants. Over time, disturbances of different types, intensities, and frequencies can manifest species diversity (different species of trees, which regenerate under different light levels, soil conditions and more), as well as structural diversity (different generations of trees) both within an individual forest and across our landscape.

Species diversity and structural diversity are both products of, and contributors to, a forest's resilience. Different species and ages of trees help forests risk-spread – similar to how we might diversify a business or a stock portfolio, risk-spreading buffers forests from catastrophic and destabilizing events. For instance, if most of the trees in a forest are a single species, a pest or pathogen that attacks that species could stress or kill nearly all the trees in that forest. Similarly, if all the trees in the forest are the same age, a wind-storm may topple virtually all of them at once. Having a diversity of tree species, sizes and ages buffers a forest from these larger-scale, more harmful disturbances.

While resilience has always been a key component of healthy forests, today it is more vital than ever. Modern forests face an unprecedented array of threats and stressors that we refer to, collectively, as global change: the combination of climate change, non-native invasive plants, animals, pests and pathogens, deer overpopulation, forest fragmentation, deforestation and more. To make matters worse, because of past land use (especially the agricultural clearing of the 1800s) our forests are generally young and simple, in most cases lacking the diversity so vital to their resilience.

It's important to recognize that even if we lived in a landscape of diverse, old-growth forests, and even if climate change was the only threat that they faced, climate change alone would test the limits of our forests' resilience. On a landscape of altered and degraded forests, and with all the threats posed by global change, it is unreasonable to expect forests to summon the resilience needed to survive this moment without our help.

How can we help forests build resilience? Most forests need, or will at least benefit from, some intervention: even if we do nothing else, it is vital that we protect forests' ability to regenerate by doing things like controlling non-native invasive plants and protecting young trees from deer browse. We can also use forest management to help our forests build resilience: encouraging the development of species diversity and structural diversity, helping them adapt to a changing climate, creating habitats that are underrepresented across our landscape and vital to our waning biodiversity.

As we learn what it means to care for ecosystems at this moment in time, it is critical that we move from a mentality that values stability: a forest's ability to stay the same; to one that values resilience: a forest's ability to respond to change and adversity when it invariably comes. In a changed and changing world, resilience is, and will likely always be, our forests' greatest asset.

Bird-Friendly Habitat Management at Geprags Park

BY TOBIAH SCHULMAN, CONSERVATION COMMISSION MEMBER

The Hinesburg Conservation Commission (HCC) has partnered with the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service (USFWS) Partners for Fish and Wildlife Program to continue habitat management at Geprags Park in 2024. Work took place the weekend of February 23-25, 2024, and involved cutting and grinding woody vegetation to both remove invasive species and promote the dense new shrub growth that is important to priority shrubland bird species in Geprags Park.

Since 2012 the HCC has been working with Audubon Vermont to manage Geprags Park for priority shrubland bird species. These include golden-winged and blue-winged warblers, American woodcock, Eastern towhee and brown thrasher. Geprags was, in the past, home to one of the only hooded warblers in the state. Past work has focused on removal of invasive plant species (primarily honeysuckle and buckthorn) and maintenance of native shrub communities. These shrub communities, dominated by dogwoods and viburnums, provide important nesting habitat and a reliable food source for fall migratory birds. They also produce an abundance of flowers that are great for pollinators.

This work will create the disturbance necessary to promote the dense shrub regeneration these birds need. While small areas will look a bit shorn at first, the regrowth that happens will be incredibly beneficial for the birds and keep them coming back to Geprags Park and thriving. Mark LaBarr of Audubon Vermont will be offering a bird surveying walk and workshop at Geprags Park on June 1. Stay tuned for more information.

For more information, contact Audubon's Mark LaBarr (mark.labarr@audubon.org) or the Hinesburg Conservation Commission (hinesburgcc@gmail.com).

Some Cliff Tops and Overlooks Closed to Protect Nesting Peregrines

FROM VT FISH & WILDLIFE PRESS RELEASE

Hiking Vermont's hillsides is a great way to enjoy a spring day, but the Vermont Fish and Wildlife Department and Audubon Vermont recommend people check to see if the area they are planning to hike or climb is open. In addition to trail closures to reduce impacts during mud season, several cliff areas are also closed to protect nesting peregrine falcons.

"Peregrine falcons are very sensitive to human presence during their breeding season, so we ask climbers and hikers to please maintain a respectful distance from their nests," said Nongame Bird Biologist Jillian Kilborn with Fish and Wildlife. "The areas closed include the portions of the cliffs where the birds are nesting and the trails leading to cliff tops or overlooks."

Over the next couple months, biologists and community scientists will be identifying cliffs occupied by peregrines this year. Sites listed will remain closed until August 1 or until Fish and Wildlife determines the risk to nesting falcons has passed. The majority of the sites are visited in April, and nesting falcons can choose new sites, so additional sites may be added or removed from the closed list which will be updated and provided on Fish and Wildlife's website at vtfishandwildlife.com.

Bolton Notch (Bolton) – UUW cliff – cliff access and climbing closed

Bone Mountain (Bolton) – portions closed to climbing

Deer Leap (Bristol) – cliff-top and climbing closed

Eagle Ledge (Vershire) – closed to hiking and climbing

Dummerston Quarry (Dummerston) – upper quarry closed

Fairlee Palisades (Fairlee) – cliff-top closed

Marshfield Mt. (Marshfield) – portions closed to climbing

Mt. Horrid (Rochester) – Great Cliff overlook closed

Nichols Ledge (Woodbury) – cliff-top and climbing closed

Prospect Rock (Johnson) – cliff-top overlook and climbing closed

Red Rocks Park (S. Burlington) – southern cliff access closed

Rattlesnake Point (Salisbury) – southern overlook closed

Snake Mountain (Addison) – entire western trail closed

Audubon Vermont conservation biologist Margaret Fowle works with volunteers and other conservation professionals to monitor the sites throughout the nesting season. "Peregrine falcons were removed from Vermont's endangered species list in 2005, and the population continues to thrive thanks to the efforts of our many volunteers and partners," said Fowle. "In many cases the lower portions of the trails remain open, and we encourage people to enjoy watching peregrine falcons from a distance that requires using binoculars or a spotting scope."

What you can do to help Vermont peregrines:

Respect cliff closures, and retreat from any cliff where you see peregrines.

Report any disturbance of nesting peregrines to your local state game warden.

Report any sightings to Margaret Fowle at margaret.fowle@audubon.org

Shelburne Museum Presents New England Now: Strange States

FROM PRESS RELEASE

This season, Shelburne Museum will present New England Now: Strange States, an exhibition showcasing the mysterious and ethereal dimensions of New England's identity. The exhibition features 12 multidisciplinary artists whose works delve deep into the inner realms of the psyche, inviting visitors to critically analyze the complexities of our reality. New England Now: Strange States will be on view May 11 through October 20.

Ghostly folklore, supernatural phenomena, and eerie legends have long shaped New England's cultural landscape, fostering an atmosphere where intellectual and creative liberation thrives. Strange States explores the region's haunted landscapes, historical settings, and the ongoing influence of luminaries like Shirley Jackson and Stephen King. New England's spectral charm continues to be a well-spring for artists seeking boundless realms of creativity beyond the ordinary.

"New England Now: Strange States invites visitors to embark on a journey into the unknown, exploring the intricate tapestry of our collective imagination," said curator Carolyn Bauer. "The artists weave together a dreamscape that challenges preconceptions and invites us to reconsider the essence of our region and the broader world."

The exhibition features recent and new artwork by prominent New England artists including Bianca Beck, Sarah Meyers Brent, Nicole Duennebier, Lauren Fensterstock, Arghavan Khosravi, Laura Kramer, Jennifer McCandless, Allison

Emilie Stark-Menneg, Iris Spring, 2022. Acrylic and oil on canvas, 80 x 100 in. Courtesy of the artist.

Maria Rodriguez, Farzaneh Safarani and Bahareh Safarani, Emilie Stark-Menneg, and Tara Sellios. Additionally, the exhibition experience expands outside the exhibition's walls with sculptures by Bianca Beck on the museum's campus.

New England Now: Strange States is the third installment in the New England Now series, launched by the museum in 2018. The series aims to highlight artists' challenging preconceptions and themes about the region. Previous exhibitions focused on the evolving landscape and diverse identities shaping New England communities.

OBITUARIES

Irena Holubowsky Case

Irena Holubowsky Case swooped away from this world hand-in-hand with the Angel Gabriel on Feb. 22, 2024. She was born Dec. 23, 1935, in Montreal, Canada, to Ukrainian immigrants Michael and Matrona (Margaret) Holubowsky. For 88 years she loved us all, steadfast in her Ukrainian identity, joyous in her faith in God, endlessly finding pathways to nourish body, earth and soul. Big sister to siblings Paul, Peter, Maria and Joseph, she took on responsibility for them seriously and with humor. Her parents moved the family to Ontario's Niagara region when she was a young girl and Irena grew up surrounded by fruit orchards and encouragement to work hard to make her dreams come true. She graduated high school as valedictorian and went on to graduate from Loretto College in Toronto. In 1960 she married James G. Case of Marcellus, N.Y. They purchased an 1800s farmhouse and property in Hinesburg, Vermont, where Irena continued to put down roots for the next 60-plus years. Asked to describe her occupation she would say, "I'm a lifelong learner." Her endless passions included raising a healthy family, hiking (Green Mountain Club, Adirondack peaks), gardening (Burlington Farmers Market, embracing the no dig/lasagna method), vitamins, healthy foods (say no to UPF's!), essential oils, stewardship of the land, traveling (South America, Ukraine and Europe), singing, reading everything: gardening books, self-healing instruction, her beloved Lord of the Rings, even the Diary of a Wimpy Kid series, learning languages (five of them), adventures with grand-kids (overnight car camping in the desert, Grand Manan Island, conservation camp, goats), writing poetry, making friends with people and animals wherever she went – all predicated on spreading kindness and acceptance. On Feb. 25, family and friends gathered for a beautiful Ukrainian Panachyda and "green" burial near her garden. Her wish was for her body to go back to the earth as simply as possible, and to "make it an education" for others. Predeceased by husband James Case and son Jaroslav Case, Irena leaves daughters Ocsanna Delgadillo (Jose Delgadillo) of League City, Texas, and Catherine Case (James Metz) of Hinesburg, Vt.; ten grandchildren; and two great-grandchildren. A Memorial Mass and celebration will be planned for late spring. Donations in her memory may be made to the Ukrainian Catholic University Foundation (Chicago, Ill.) and the Vermont Forest Cemetery (Roxbury, Vt.).

Brigitte Audy Thompson

The world lost a bright light on February 18 – Brigitte Audy Thompson left this earth to start her new journey. Born in Burlington, Vermont, on Dec.

7, 1968, to Byron and Judith Audy, she attended St. Joseph's Elementary School, Burlington High School, Rice High School and Champlain College.

Her entrepreneurial spirit started at a young age when she started working to earn money to purchase her first car. This passion continued as she went on to start her own bookkeeping business in 1991. Over the years she also worked as a freelance writer, website designer, medical transcriptionist and became a published author of several business books. Brigitte also founded a nonprofit dog rescue in 2015, VT Dog Rescue, and saved thousands of homeless dogs from the south.

She enjoyed being self-employed because it gave her the flexibility to be fully present for the best part of her life – being a mom.

Brigitte and Keith were married in 1989. They welcomed their daughter, Sarah, in 1993, son Jacob in 1997 and daughter Katherine in 2001. Together they made many wonderful memories especially during the 17 years they lived in Williston, Vt. Having the house filled with her children and their friends filled Brigitte's heart with happiness. There were epic sleepovers, birthday parties, movie nights, camp outs, kickball games, bonfires, and Halloween parties. She looked back at these times as the most joyful in her life.

Brigitte is survived by her husband, Keith; her children, Sarah, Jacob (Jenna), and Katherine; and her beloved dogs and horses. Brigitte also leaves behind her sister Kristen (Bill) and her nephews, her father Byron Audy, and she was predeceased by her beloved mother Judith Audy.

She also leaves behind many friends who she hopes will take time today to share a compliment with a stranger to make someone's day a whole lot brighter.

Susan E. Roberts

Susan E. Roberts, 72, beloved wife and mother, passed away Monday, March 11, 2024, at her home in Hinesburg. She was cherished by her family; her husband of 50 years, John, who survives her; along with her son, Jack and his wife, Carin, of North Ferrisburg; daughter, Charlotte, and her companion, Avi Halperin, of Olympia, Washington. She is also grieved by her sister, Nancy Horton, of Chili, N.Y. Susan retired from Vermont Teddy Bear after 18 years in the personalization department. She was an active member of the Hinesburg Historical Society, and enjoyed researching history and genealogy. A celebration of her life will be conducted this summer at a site and time to be determined. In lieu of flowers, contributions may be made in her name to the Hinesburg Fire Department, or Richmond Rescue.

Vermont. Jan feels fortunate to live in a place with so much unspoiled nature. Jan hopes his photos can give "even a little of the beauty that so inspires me in this place."

Jan has by choice limited his photography to the beauty of this particular place: "There is a discipline in confining my attention to such a narrow geography." He is forced to go deeper than he might otherwise go by photographing the same things in the same places over and over. And to be fair, there is not a complete absence of variety – even in the same places with the same subjects the light can change everything!

Capturing a Moment

Four photographers who make time stand still

BY JOHN CLIFFORD

Editors note: due to space considerations, we are able to show only a limited number of photos in print. For more photos please visit the sites listed within this article.

Pulitzer Prize-winning author and noted photographer Eudora Welty once wrote, “A good snapshot keeps a moment that’s gone, from running away.” Photographs document our history, and serve as a record of our personal journey. These photos become among our most cherished possessions and we place them in positions of honor and reflection in our homes or offices.

My mother spent most of her later life visiting historic sites, old battlefields and gravestones, talking to older Vermonters. Investigation of old documents and family connections, because she understood our present lives are connected to our past lives and much of that through photos.

Without question, the art of photography has changed considerably, and now images can be captured with speed and accuracy with digital cameras, and a digital photo can be seen around the world in an instant. Incredible images of distant stars and galaxies, taken from light particles traveling millions of light-years to be captured by the Hubble space telescope, allowing astronomers to re-write theories.

In and near Hinesburg, we are fortunate to have well-known professional photographers who call this area home.

Jamie Proctor-Brassard Lindsay Gardner

Jamie Proctor-Brassard developed an early interest in photography. Her high school didn’t offer classes in photography, so she helped to start a photo club and darkroom. Jamie attended Keene State College and earned a BA in graphic design and photography in 2003, and a Master of Photography Degree from Professional Photographers of America in 2022. She just completed her term as President of Vermont Professional Photographers. Jamie owns Letter10 Creative, a design and photography studio specializing in Vermont brands since 2008. Jamie states: “The most rewarding part is giving back to Vermonters, through teaching and helping clients with a customized experience. My goal is to tell a story and to create an image that will leave someone with emotion and curiosity.” Jamie’s love for photography and giving back has led her to volunteer for “Now I Lay Me Down to Sleep,” a national organization offering professional images to grieving families. She provides a photographic gift of remembrance for parents grieving deep loss.

Visit letter10creative.com/ for more.

Lindsay got started in photography after coming to terms with the cost – in her words “shocked” – of taking portraits of her newborn children, and deciding there must be a better way. She got together enough funds and purchased an expensive digital camera and started learning. Lindsay completed several online photography courses and became a member of the Vermont Professional Photographers, and started an online photography business. Most of her business involves taking graduation photos, newborn and Christmas card photos. “My goal is to help people make connections in their lives and make them feel beautiful,” she said.

Jan Cannon

Jan Cannon has been taking pictures for over 30 years. The majority of his pictures have been taken in the town of Charlotte, Vermont – either at Lake Champlain or in the woods nearby. Low hills slope down to a broad valley on the shores of beautiful Lake Champlain. In the distance to the west are the Adirondack Mountains of New York and to the east are the Green Mountains of
